Maine Democracy. The trials and tribulations of the Mrine emocracy almost make that party a worthy object of pity. At the head of the oration stands a man who is denounced by Democratic organs outside the State as disgrace to the party, and who is tord ally despised by a considerable portion of the party in the State, so much so in fact that a special committee to control all the funds of the campaign has been se-leted, but he has a strong grip on the endle of the machine and re-elected himhimself as a member of the State Commottee for the next year. The State Conention threw overboard the old candicate or the avowed purpose of conducting a o dier campaign, but the party had not farly started in its new role when Mr. Morrison made his raid on, pension leg sla-ti-n in the House and the President began to grind out veto messages at a rate unheard of in the history of the country, leampletely paralyzing in its infancy the effort of the Maine Democ atic brethren to ter for the soldier vote.

Nor were they any more successin formulating a platform. ranging it is as follows: The hair, beginning just back of the soft bebe bang, is divided into three equal parts as it fulls on the shoulders. It is then again subdivided, making an upper and ower plait of each of these divisions. Then take the two middle plaits; cross them and wind to form a coil. It is necessary just here to pin these braids securely, for they are the foundation for the rest of the colffure. These preliminaries attended to, the plaits are then taken from behind each ear and carried round the coil. Lastly, cross the two plaits on each side over the top of the coil, bring down and fasten the ends securely underneath. According as it suits the wearer, he coils must be arranged either high or low, at the back of the head. For those to whom it is becoming, the basket braid is twined low in the nape of the neck.

A French model shows a crown of white crepe wrought with gold butterflies, the brim edged with black velvet overlaid with white lace dotted with tiny gold beads. The front of the bonnet is a mass of the ality embroidered crepe laid in upright folds, with one immense gold gauze butterfly set in the centre. A sweet little princess bonnet is made of pink silk baliste, wrought with Persian embroideries in scattered designs, and triumied with a wreath of pink crepe hollyhocks and palest gress mailedniair fers fronds. A bonnet of Persian mayer crepe liese in gypsy style is garrilored with Spanish blonde and milk-white roses, frosted with silver to resemble dew. crape lisse. Spanish muslin, silk grenadine

Bebe hats of silk mull are now used for tennis and morning wear in the country. Bought of fashionable milliners, these Persian mauve holds its favor in the world of fashion.

Exquisite Parisian toilets are made of pale apricot satin, embodered with blush roses and sprays of forget-me-net, and combined with Lyons satin of the most delicate shade of turquoise blue.

The light-weight tricotine silks made up with Jersey podices are stylish and pretty accompanine ints for dressy skirts of other material. They fit infinitely better than any Jersey of plain stockhette, and have all the elegant appearance of the regular silk-web Jerseys, while costing a third less than these in price.

The new low-colled, busket-platted coffure has suddenly come into great fashion, and one of the methods of arranging it is as follows: The hair, beginning just back of the soft beeb bang, is divided into three equal parts as it falls on hats are quite expens ve, but they are easi
